Driving requires focus and concentration

Smartphones have become deeply ingrained in society and are relied upon for many reasons. Although the technology has benefits, there can be negative consequences, one of which is distracted driving.

Statistics indicate distracted driving is more than just a minor problem. According to the Elkhart County Sheriff's Department, there were 77 crashes in 2017 in which one of the factors marked in the crash was distracted driving. Thirteen crashes listed cellphone usage as a factor and 23 citations were issued for texting and driving.

In 2018, as of about mid-May, there were 27 crashes with distracted driving listed as one of the factors, five crashes with cellphone usage as a factor and 13 citations issued for texting and driving.

Within the city limits of Goshen, according to the Goshen Police Department, 196 traffic collisions within the last five years have been attributed to the primary factor of distracted drivers. Thirty-six of those collisions resulted in injuries.

And according to the National Highway Traffic and Safety Administration, in 2016 alone, 3,450 people were killed nationwide due to distracted driving. And in 2015, 391,600 were injured in motor vehicle crashes involving distracted drivers, while approximately 481,000 drivers were using cellphones while driving.

To be clear, although using a cellphone may be thought of as the most common form of distracted driving, it can actually take on many forms. Changing the radio station, talking to others in the vehicle, applying makeup or eating and driving with obstructed windows due to snow and ice are among the other forms of distracted driving, though the list could include other forms.

"There is the potential for drivers to be distracted by many things that may divide their attention and keep their eyes off of the roadway," said Capt. Michael Culp of the Elkhart County Sheriff's Department. "This can increase the chances of not being able to respond appropriately to other motorists, bicyclists and pedestrians in the area."

Glancing down at the cellphone screen or texting tend to be more noticeable forms of distracted driving, but from the perspective of law enforcement any distraction "creates an increased risk of a motor vehicle crash as it takes motorists' focus off the roadway," Culp said. Many crashes have been caused by drivers simply not paying attention to the roadway and circumstances around them, he added, saying "this is an issue nationally."

As of July 1, 2011, texting and driving became illegal in Indiana. But it can be difficult to prove if someone is texting while driving.

Explaining why distracted driving is an issue is not so simple sometimes. But some factors can clearly be involved. In a society focused on agendas and keeping a schedule, if a motorist is running late it could cause them to take unnecessary risks and not to focus on driving safely.

As noted earlier, smartphones have become deeply ingrained in society. Some people may have the tendency to feel they must stay connected even while driving. But as noted by the Goshen Police Department, "texting is the most alarming distraction" because sending or reading a text can take a person's eyes off the road for five seconds. At 55 miles per hour, "that's like driving the length of an entire football field with your eyes closed."

Driving safely, GPD noted, cannot be done unless the task of driving "has your full attention."

GPD encourages all drivers to give themselves plenty of time to arrive safely at a destination so "your schedule is not a distraction."

Drivers are also encouraged to leave appropriate space between "you and the car in front of you so you can react to any sudden stops or changes in traffic flow." Be conscious of speed limits and traffic signs and safely pull over if you must communicate via cellphone, eat or tend to children in the backseats, etc.
